■ Islamic Faith 'Evil', Says Pastor

The Rev Alan Clifford, pastor of the Norwich Reformed Church, has branded the Islamic faith as "evil". Needless to say, religious and race leaders in Norwich have condemned his backing of claims that Islam is "a monster in our midst".

The Norwich Evening News reported that while Rev Clifford tried to distance himself from the BNP the pastor echoed its leader's views on Islam. The pastor stated: "However unpalatable or non-PC the truth is to many people today, we need to know the facts about Islam."

■ Support From Spain

The Post, an English language newspaper that circulates amongst exPats in Spain, had an interesting comment from columnist Ric Polansky (an American) in its issue of July 21st. He wrote of the comments made to him by a Briton living there.

"... the BBC spied on Brits as if they were as nasty as the terrorists. Why doesn't the BBC go down to the Mosques and interview some of the future young Taliban? Ask what atrocities they are planning next week? What innocent people they will blow up? Why do the British castigate their own people while Muslim Imams preach "kill the non-believer (infidel)" in our land, under our skies and the BBC won't investigate them? Nor can the law deport them. But someone worried about what us, the man in the street, says in private what he'd like to do to them and he is portrayed as a foaming at the mouth radical".

■ Perverts, Crooks and Liars

The old parties and the media have consistently portrayed the BNP as a bunch of thugs and half-wits. Where we have attracted undesirables our record shows that we have soon shown them the door. How can the Lib-Lab-Cons have the audacity to vilify us when they have some very nasty characters of their own?

Robert Richdale, a Tory Councillor in Howard's own constituency of Folkestone had refused to resign his seat after admitting he has convictions for paedophilia, causing death by dangerous driving and 19 drug offences, plus carrying a weapon and forgery.

Also last month, a Tory Councillor in Crowland, Lincs, absconded from jail where he was serving 18 months for trying to change the route of a local by-pass, so as to make money out of land he owned nearby.

As for the Lib-Dems, well known for attracting paedophiles, last month's news was that their mayor of Chippenham, Wilts, one Ross Henning, had previously served a two year jail sentence for his involvement in a half a million pound cocaine smuggling ring!"

Labour's alleged crook last month was Berni Callaghan, a Labour Councillor and prospective first Black mayor of Cambridge. She has been taken to court by her own council for fraud. She denies five allegations of fraudulently claiming housing benefit and council tax.

■ Ministers Turn Blind Eye to Heroin Flood

The minutes of the cabinet committee on drugs policy, chaired by David Blunkett, reveal that ministers have decided that any arrests of drug lords "would need to be handled sensitively in the run-up to the coming Afghan elections". This is causing cheap heroin to flood into Britain. The Sunday Times, August 1st, says that it comes as one of Britain's top police officers said the government was "losing the plot" over the war on drugs.

Despite the government's much-heralded policy to eradicate Afghanistan's heroin crop, ministers have decided to delay action this year to prop up the regime of Tony Blair's ally, President Hamid Karzai.

Cracking down on the crop would alienate voters in the forthcoming Afghan elections.

■ We Help Pay For New London Mosque

The recently opened London Muslim Centre in the East End can hold 10,000 at prayer although at the opening another 2,000 had to pray outside. It is Europe's biggest Islamic complex. The total cost was £10.4 million, of which £2.5 million came from the Government, i.e. the taxpayers.

Buildings on the site in Whitechapel were demolished for the giant complex. It is also home to a synagogue which will continue to operate inside the complex under an agreement. For how long, might one ask?

■ Illegal Offered Top Police Job

It appears that Cambridgeshire Police, one of the forces criticised for failing to carry out adequate vetting of Ian Huntley, the Soham child murderer, offered an illegal immigrant a senior police job before checking his background. Police invited an African-born man to become its £42,000-a-year head of diversity after he gave good interviews. But the offer was withdrawn when checks revealed the applicant was in the country illegally.

Labour Massages The Immigration Figures

Following a delay which the Home Office claimed was due to "a small error" in its work, but in reality was to give time for the spin doctors to do their work, New Labour has claimed that it "has got immigration under control". Its media mouthpieces, not least the BBC, have given great prominence to the fact that the number of asylum seekers fell by 11 per cent between April and June this year. Blunkett and Blair hope that not too many voters noticed that the overall number of non-European immigrants rose by a fifth last year to a record total of 140,000. This does not include the illegals who are still sneaking in by the thousand at every minor port or haven and through various guises ranging from students to dubiously arranged marriages. The 140,000 compares to 60,000 when Labour came to power in 1997. In fact about 540,000 people have been granted leave to settle in Britain in the past five years.

Labour's trick in diminishing the number of those registered as "asylum seekers", now down to 15 per cent of the total number of immigrants, is to push more and more into the following categories. Around half were given permission for reasons of "family formation and reunion" and 21 per cent were "employment related". With one and a half million unemployed in Britain, what do we need more unskilled and semi-skilled workers for? Particularly in London and the South East, where the unemployment rate, including among burger servers, is the highest in the country.

What progress has Blunkett made in increasing the number of asylum seekers and other illegals who were denied leave to stay here? The figures show that of the record number of 87,000 asylum appeals, the number actually deported was lower than ever in percentage terms! To be fair to Blunkett (if we must) much of this failure is down to the European Convention on Human Rights that has the power to overrule our courts' decisions.

What did the other parties say following the publication of these alarming immigration figures.? The Conservative home affairs spokesman, Humfrey Malins, said that a small fall in the asylum figures was meaningless. We cannot disagree with this, although he could have said much more.

The Liberal Democrat home affairs spokesman, Mark Oaten, said: "Setting targets to reduce asylum applications is a meaningless exercise. The numbers seeking asylum should be based on the international situation, not the Government's reaction to tabloid hysteria". Well, a Lib-Dem would say that, wouldn't he? And what did UKIP say, bearing in mind they stole many BNP Euro votes by pretending to make immigration a major issue? They have said nothing as far as I know, including their website up to August 27th.

Labour's Dirty War on Migration Watchdog

Apart from the BNP and such publications as RightNow, the only other body to expose the duplicity of Labour's immigration figures is Migration Watch UK, headed by former ambassador Sir Andrew Green. Its effectiveness has been demonstrated by Home Office ministers ordering independent civil servants to mount a covert propaganda campaign against it. This was revealed by Sir Andrew using the Government's own access to information code to apply for all Home Office files on himself and Migration Watch, including e-mails. The latter showed that the Home Office's special group met to discuss what they knew about Migration Watch and how ministers could best "combat" its policy statements.

According to David Leppard, writing in the Sunday Times of August 2nd, the Home Office unit also appeared to be manipulating the timing of supposedly objective statistical releases for party political advantage and allowing ministers - even the prime minister - to make statements that officials know to be false.

One of the more controversial aspects of the e-mails is the way civil servants in the unit handle the suggestion by Migration Watch that the Home Office is manipulating figures from the Office for National Statistics (ONS). In a note on how ministers can publicly rebut the claim, one official suggests using the following form of words: "The ONS operates completely independently in producing the (international migration) figures." But a separate set of e-mails in September undermines the claim. They reveal that contrary to accepted practice the ONS approached the Home Office for guidance on when it should publish a particularly sensitive set of statistics that included government figures on foreign migrants. These were the latest immigration figures that we have given above.

No wonder Sir Andrew Green told David Leppard: "This government is a propaganda machine more than a government. Previous governments used the information service to produce information, not propaganda."

JUNE 10th -What Happened?

Director of Group Development, Tony Lecomber looks at the recent European and Council elections

The elections on June 10th were, potentially, the most important elections the party had ever contested in terms of a possible political breakthrough. In the event, the potential was not realised and the party failed to breakthrough, not withstanding an impressive vote tally and a modest increase in the numbers of our Councillors.

There were a number of reasons for this and it a measure of how seriously our opponents now take us that there are so many reasons. These were:

1). Manipulation of the entire voting process itself by the government so that four whole Euro regions were conducted by postal ballot for the reason that it was felt that postal ballots equate to a higher turnout and it is believed that higher turnouts will disadvantage the BNP.

2). A three-party stitch-up whereby in some key wards the leading establishment party would not be seriously bothered by the other two in a bid to beat back the BNP. This was agreed at the now infamous 'secret M62 meeting.'

3). Non-delivery of postal ballots in the BNP's strongest areas.

4). Non-delivery of BNP election material anywhere left-wing postal workers and union bosses thought that they could get away with it.

5). Burnt out post boxes in two of the BNP's strongest areas.

6). Mass delivery of 'election material' (several million items) by those not contesting the election and which has now been made legal, purely to denigrate the BNP and spoils chances.

7). Pressure applied by the police to Channel 4 to stop a documentary appearing just before the election showing the sexually predatory racial victimisation of white girls by older non-white men.

8). Censorship applied to the BNP's party political broadcast in relation to the non-appearance of that programme.

9). Cheating. In Grays, Essex the BNP's Nick Geri slumped from 1st place last September to 6th place this June. There was evidence - but not enough to go to a court with - that this was the result of cheating. Certainly the winning Labour team were not cock-a-hoop as they might have been expected to have been and indeed they scuttled off as quickly as possible that night more as if they'd lost than won, while the Tories were genuinely shocked.

UNGUARDED BALLOT BOXES

In the Greater London Assembly elections, the plastic ballot boxes were sealed with parcel tape across the hinges/joints and then left unguarded in a number of Town Halls for a whole night. Small wonder that when party workers witnessed the opening of the ballot boxes, dozens and dozens were seen to be spoilt with two votes having been cast where only one should have been. The two votes being for the BNP and Respect- the far-left, pro-immigrant, anti-British group. The BNP missed election to the GLA by 0.3%. Did it make the difference? We don't know, but going to an electoral court in this instance would have been so expensive as to jeopardise the entire party with no guarantee as to the outcome.

10) Media blackout. As usual in the run up to the election, the media conspired to deny the BNP any publicity, certainly any good publicity, it could. And if the BNP was mentioned, it was never in the context that the BNP is anti-EU.

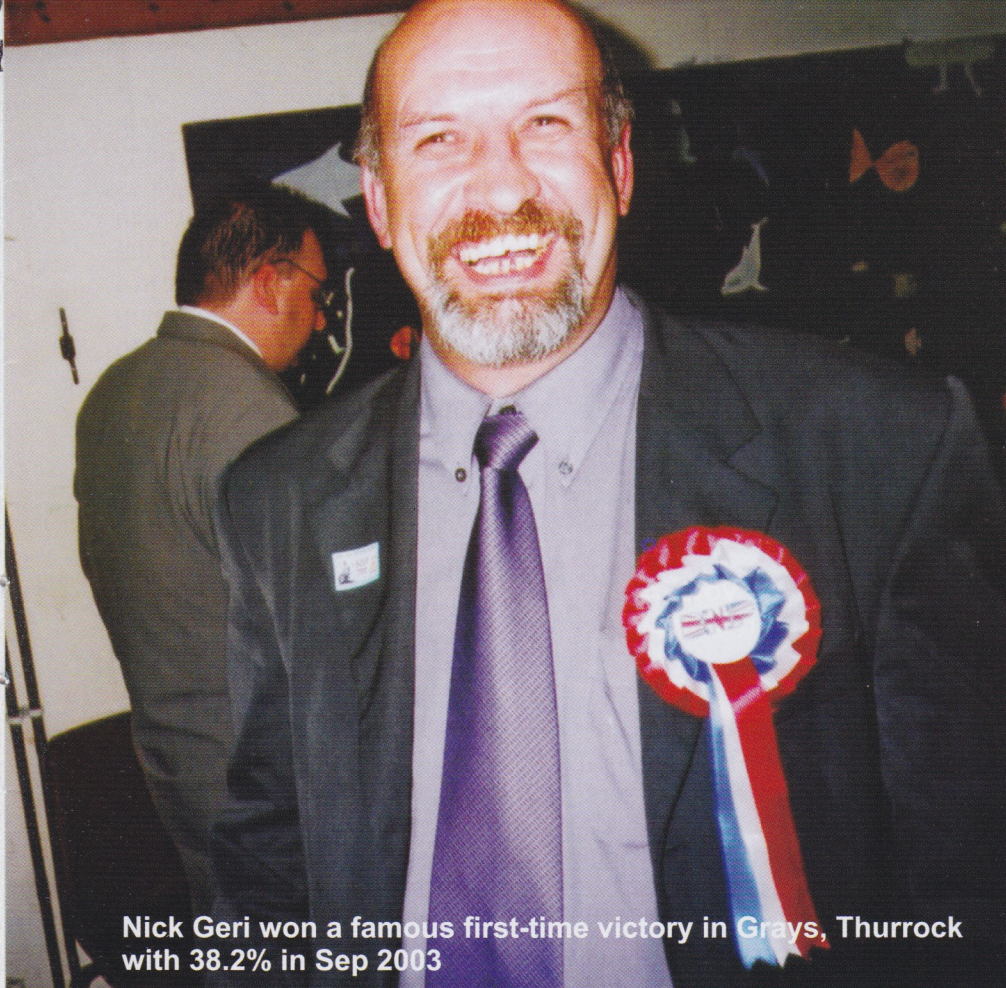

11) The promotion of UKIP by the media in a bid to take the wind out of the BNP's sails. UKIP spent £2million and used the services of publicist Max Clifford to hype a poll commissioned by UKIP showing them on 22% of the poll. The campaign to stampede the mass of the disenchanted British public away from the BNP and towards UKIP was largely successful, although the vote the BNP nevertheless achieved in spite of all that, nearly a million votes, has ensured that there has been no crowing about the BNP's failure to obtain election to Strasbourg.

Of all the problems encountered by the party, the one that proved most damaging was undoubtedly the media hype of UKIP. From 2% two months before the election, the loaded question giving them 22% was pumped for all it was worth giving them, in the end, some 16% nationally. It is likely that a good third of that vote would otherwise have gone to the BNP giving us several MEPs and representation on the GLA where UKIP won two seats.

Nevertheless, while the UKIP hype substantially accounted for BNP failure to breakthrough at European level, it in no way explains the far too modest progress made at local level. At local level, the BNP fielded more than 300 candidates, UKIP around 100 and clashes were rare.

COMPLEMENTARY ELECTIONS

One old fool has opined that failure to achieve more substantial gains at local level was due to the party prioritising the European Elections at the expense of the local elections. This simply isn't true at all. Certainly the huge, and successful, effort to raise enough money to contest the European elections was pushed very hard. It had to be to raise the sum necessary to make a decent fight of it and the party can be pleased that every Euro deposit bar one was retained by the party. And there was some talk of how the party was going to spend some of the Euro money which would have been forthcoming with election, and rightly so, since with such large sums on offer, the question needed settling at least in outline. But money raised and talk of money to come is not the same thing as saying the local elections were given second billing.

The fact is that both sets of elections were complementary, not exclusive. The European election required, above all, money. The local elections required, above all, man power, effort and shoe leather. The same dullard claimed that more money spent on the local elections would have produced better results, when everyone knows that what is required is effort and shoe leather and that, in any case, local election spending does not run to buy advertising billboards and the like.

In a council ward, the election spend is £242 plus 4.7p per elector. So in a typical ward of 4,500 homes, say 9,000 voters, the maximum spend is £665 of which the main glossy election address will account for half. Question: is the rest of the money better spent on another high quality leaflet giving just two leaflets for the campaign, or on cheaper leaflets giving a number of leaflets for the campaign? Since every serious party figures it's the latter, then the constraining factor is not money but time and man power to put out these leaflets and if a quality canvassing campaign is being run, then only six leaflets aside from the main election address are remotely possible. Then again, all parties have to put up with their do-nothings and no-brains. These are the people who believe that they know best when clearly they can scarcely get their feet in the right shoes of a morning.

THE POWER OF CANVASSING

No, the real reason for our too-modest advance lies elsewhere. For a number of years, the BNP has realised the importance of the ladder strategy and of canvassing. The ladder strategy posits local election success leading on to success higher up the political ladder, such as Parliament. And canvassing is the tool which will bring local election success in the first place. There will come a time when this slow motor of growth, canvassing, will be of lesser importance than the general political mood which will give electoral success in any case. We have had glimpses of it already in Burnley last year and in Bradford this year. No canvassing took place in Bradford for instance, but local circumstances of 60 rapes by foreign sex beasts preying upon local girls was enough to send four BNP councillors into the council chamber.

In general though, and certainly for the time being, only the hard work of canvassing will bring local electoral success. Heavy canvassing in by-elections has secured victory in Halifax, Blackburn, Heckmondwike and Grays.

After the local elections last year, the party leadership urged Organisers to fully canvass one ward in each area during the Autumn. To my knowledge, not a single Organiser even made the attempt. Then as Winter gave way to Spring this year, Organisers were urged to canvass one or two wards so that, going in to the local elections in June, while we were fielding as many candidates as possible to stretch the opposition, we would nevertheless have canvassed 2-3 wards in every area. That was the plan which, if it had been carried out, would have secured election for a goodly number of BNP candidates.

In the event, only one BNP group undertook a serious canvassing effort. One or two other BNP groups undertook a limited canvass to achieve limited success proving that you get out what you put in.

I want to clarify immediately what canvassing does and does not mean. It does not mean talking to a few individuals who happen to be out in their gardens as our BNP leaflet team sweeps majestically past. Nor does it mean canvassing six or seven roads out of maybe 60 that will make up a ward. For the term to have any real meaning, and to have even a limited effect, it must mean canvassing the whole ward once. And in canvassing terms that is a minimum effort since at least two and preferably four full canvassing sweeps should be effected before going on to the re-knocks which are just as important.

The one group that undertook a serious canvassing effort, Epping BNP, stood just four candidates, but canvassed for three of them. The result was an outstanding success all three being elected with no prior electoral outing in the area for more than a decade. Each of the three wards had a minimum once canvass with one of the wards having started a second sweep. Such an effort would not have secured victory in a by-election, but in the regular round of elections where all the parties were stretched it was enough and Epping BNP reaped the rewards of their hard work.

Sadly, the reason for less local election success than expected nationally is that Organisers did not generally organise any canvassing. Too many Organisers, knowing that there would be blanket leaflet coverage courtesy of the European election plus TV election broadcasts, rested upon that coverage and took things easy. It is probable that Epping BNP undertook as much canvassing as the rest of the party combined. Another reason for less effort being applied was that with whole councils up for grabs and the BNP standing just one candidate in a ward where three were being contested so to benefit from shared voting also led to a false sense that this would be an easy election.

While there was little that we could do about the UKIP hype, there is a lot we can do about the lack of effort that was applied in the Council elections this year. Put simply, it means rededicating ourselves to local politics and recognising that success will not come easy. We cannot rely upon a rape wave to secure election for our candidates.

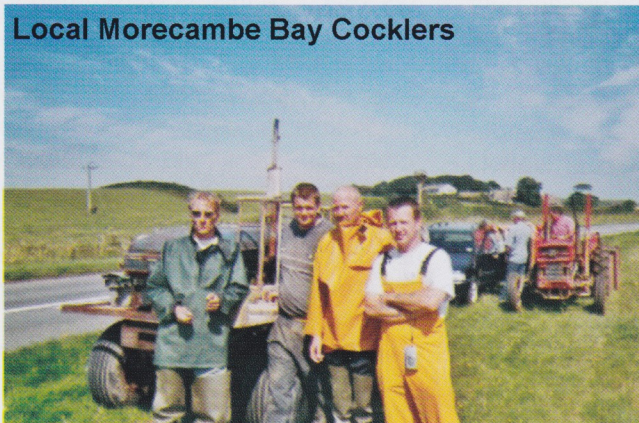

What we must do was shown by Epping with a 100% canvassing/election success rate. Further proof, if any is needed, was provided by Leeds BNP last month. Two identical wards were contested in Morley, which has never been a particularly good area for us. One was leafleted and one got a 4-sweep, 2-re-knock canvass. The one that was leafleted, Morley Central, got a so-so 12.4% of the vote. The one that had the work put in, Morley Elmfield, notched up 32.7% of the vote. In a more favourable area it would have been enough to win, but even so the 20-point boost provides an object lesson as to the power of canvassing.

Tony Lecomber will be writing next month on mapping out a winning strategy.

Easy Pickings For Chinese Cocklers

Following a report published on 9th August 2004 in the North East Evening Mail (see box) Robert Walker, who is the BNP member mentioned in the report, looks into the scandal of the Morecambe Bay Chinese cocklers

Local Morecambe Bay Cocklers

Most of us should now be familiar with the plight of the Chinese Cocklers of Morecambe Bay, but what is really going on?

On the north side of Morecambe bay is the Furness Peninsular, the two main towns are the market town of Ulverston and the shipbuilding town of Barrow-in-Furness. My grandparents grew up in the ship building town districts of Walney Island and Roose. Both were devout Labour supporters as a result of the hardship suffered in the early nineteen hundreds, in fact my grandmother marched at the head of the band waving the red flag and my grandfather flew the red flag from his school roof when the Labour party won the election.

STRANDED CHINESE COCKLERS TARGETED BY BNP

THE BNP turned Saturday's potential cockling tragedy into a recruiting drive, the Evening Mail can reveal.

A British National Party member was seen giving leaflets to spectators as Walney Coastguard organised the rescue of about 190 cocklers from the treacherous sands.

An unnamed BNP member, understood to be from Leeds, was on the scene as police arrived and handed out leaflets and business cards.

A Coastguard spokesman said: "We don't need people banging drums while a rescue operation is in progress and I don't condone this sort of thing."

BNP spokesman Gary Thomas confirmed that BNP supporters raced to the scene to exploit the situation.

He said: "Our policy is that Chinese cocklers are not welcome if they are detrimental to local business.

"If that is the case they should be sent home."

Cumbria Police spokesman Mike Head said: "One BNP member made himself known to officers.

The surrounding area of Furness is a very beautiful idyllic piece of England with farms, old villages and castles. The people have never been exposed to the multiculturalism of their sister towns of Lancashire.

The tide (sea) comes into the bay twice a day, a wonderful sight from Roa Island but extremely dangerous. Only the local fisherman understand the behaviour of the tides and sand banks, passed down over generations, as they follow the tide out on tractors to collect cockles, shrimps, muscles and fish from their lines. But the locals have had a rude awakening to the benefits of multiculturalism as hordes of Chinese and east Europeans employed by unscrupulous Brits, turn up to plunder the rich stocks.

No Tax Or Insurance Mini-bus loads of immigrant workers are transported to the coastline. Their vehicles are without road tax or any other legal requirements. The local Cumbrian Police know this, but turn their backs and ignore these facts. The police just threaten any locals about their own behaviour and vehicle condition. Fifty to sixty immigrant workers then cram themselves into agricultural trailers that are towed by tractors out into the bay. Blatant negligent behaviour without any safe practice.

Now imagine yourself four miles out in the sand banks and channels of Morecambe Bay. There are four of you tampering the cockles from the sand banks, sieving out the smaller cockles (below 20mm) for future stocks. You have done this for years when over a hundred people, mainly Chinese, disembark from tractors and trailers and start to plunder your catch. It is a recipe for aggression and possible loss of life. Being sensible, you leave and drive back to shore to report the hideous crime that you have just witnessed. Meanwhile the Chinese load hundreds of bags of cockles on to the trailers for their British gang masters. The load is so great that there is no room for the workers, so they have to walk back to shore, a race against time and tide. Many a time they are trapped on sand banks. Not a problem, just call the free taxi, a ride on the Coast Guards' helicopter back to shore. Get back in your minibus and away.

Meanwhile, you the local fisherman are completely ignored by all the authorities when you report what is going on. And every one of us now has to pick up the £5,000 per hour cost of the helicopter. To add insult to injury the Chinese have left enough piles of litter and humane defecation to shame a horde of gypsies.

The Price Of Multiculturalism

One of the local residents is Labour Minister John Hutton, described by the locals as ignorant and useless! But is he? If all this behaviour were happening in the Cotswolds what would he do then, nothing?

I believe the reason is multiculturalism. There is a lot of open land on Furness with work for foreigners. To house these foreign workers would work perfectly according to the social engineering beliefs of our modern governments. But try telling this to the locals and they dismiss you instantly as some sort of crank. No wonder they vote Labour and believe that the authorities are going to sort this all out!

The calls for a fishing licence for the immigrant workers are a bad idea. A licence or permit of any description would only legalise their existence in this country. The shell fish will soon run out at this present rate of plunder and lead to an ecological disaster. When this happens the now unemployed migrant workers will have a claim on our state. As immigrants they WILL receive preferential treatment, new homes will be built for them and their offspring will be transported around the Furness area to balance the ethnic cultural diversity in the schools.

Wake up Furness and smell the coffee!

AN ODYSSEY INTO REALITY

David Hamilton describes key observations and incidents that led him to realise the destructive force of multiracialism

In the Odyssey of Homer, the hero Odysseus wandered for ten years as he struggled to return to his family from the war with Troy. Homer is one of the greatest Dead White Males, a font of our literature, which held ideas for subjects, quotations and a form of literature for our succeeding writers for centuries to come. It was a spring to the greatest literary tradition in human history, English Literature which is now a drying river. It was a blending of myths and legends organised into the form of a lofty Epic - the story of a hero. Epic is produced in the early days of a nation, when different tribes are settling territory and battling for supremacy. In his novel Rassellas Dr. Johnson sends his hero on an adventure from the Happy Valley into the real world to make "the choice of life".

My own personal odyssey was from the phantasy world of received opinions created for us by the ruling elite into the reality of everyday life. One of the first things to learn is that it is not only "Whites" who are racist. A fact that we are not supposed to know consciously but to be repressed by the repetition of the canard that we are to blame for the failure of the multiracial dream to materialise because we are essentially evil (racist). It sinks in only slowly that other ethnic groups can be racist towards us and also have their own hatreds of other ethnic groups. The animosity between Muslims and Sikhs is very fierce indeed. I hear that gangs of rival asylum seekers have had gun battles in quiet Ashford, Kent.

DEHUMANISATION

This training to see ourselves as uniquely racist is the basis of that covert racist attack on us called Racial Awareness Training, or RAT. If you convince another that they are always wrong then even when you yourself are wrong it looks as if you are right! Every reader has experienced this phenomenon. It is how our negative self-image has been brainwashed into our consciousness. Well, stop! Think. That is the dehumanisation process. Just sit back and ponder this. You, gentle reader, are being dehumanised to make you feel guilty for things you have not done and to weaken you for dispossession. It is to demoralise you, to sap your spirit so that you move out of your community without a protest.

As a little vignette of modern evil I return to RAT. The basis of this was a book by one Judith Katz that stated that racism is inherent only in whites. All other ethnic groups are pure and untainted by sin. Then in a perverse double bind those that are labelled racist are reviled and abused in a sadistic ritual to drive out their racism and to punish them for imagined sins. In these sessions on video, a white blonde-haired woman would be verbally abused until she wept. Is that to promote racial harmony? No: it is a racist attack on us. This is the "face your own racism" argument. It is the masochistic confessional that we are supposed to undergo as police officers do.

There are other Multiracial myths, which are propagandised as truth but melt into nothing when tested against reality, rather like the melting pot. It is thought that Muslims have a superior morality. This is linked to the removal of vice girls from their areas. In Balsall Heath, Birmingham, there was a famous street named Cheddars Road. For years it had been a red-light area until the Muslim community drove them out. They were driven out by intimidation and harassment not by harmonious relations. The last one to go was jeered and abused by children and repeatedly had fireworks pushed through her letterbox. A journalist on the Daily Mail (I believe), by the name of Jessica something or other, extolled these actions as evidence of a superior morality over our own. She did not know what had really happened and should have remained silent.

This is a process to claim territory and make it suitable for their women and children by vigilante groups who drive around in widening circles to the next area and harass women who they take to be tarts and street drinkers preparatory to moving in.

Of all the ethnic groups that have been directed into our communities the most successful are Asians, whereas most Blacks are poor and the preferential treatment the Government gives to asylum seekers is especially obscene to them and they resent it. Several have told me they have voted BNP.

DECULTURALISATION

There is also a dark side: Deculturalisation is ravaging the Muslim communities as many of their young men fall prey to heroin and crack cocaine. I can imagine people being surprised at this revelation, which clashes so mightily with our received opinions. To those unworldly doubters I say, "Go round the hostels and the Narcotics Anonymous meetings in the inner cities and look. You might be able to help some."

Here is an example of how totalitarianism works. As I chose my words to write "men" I froze momentarily, as I realised that describing them as "men" is no longer permitted as it is not politically correct. I should have said "persons". The reason why I chose and used the word "men" was because in my experience the Asians who are addicted to heroin and crack cocaine have all been young men and to say "person" would be to implicate women in something that I have no evidence for and that would be unjust.

This is a small example of the permanent battle between reason and experience. We are politically programmed now by reason, not experience, by received ideology. Ideology is a system of abstract ideas aimed towards a future system of perfection that we call Utopia. There is no learning involved but a surrendering to the orthodox views of the time. It is a type of arrested mental development. I recently visited Ludlow, which is a completely different world: or was, for around six of their young locals died of heroin last year. I asked the young woman who was telling me this tragedy if those that brought it in were local. Mostly outsiders I was told.

FOLLIES PAST AND PRESENT

Just nine miles away from Ludlow there is, (or was) a little hamlet called

Upper Dinchope where my grandmother was born and her grandmother before her, at the Buck House. There is a folly nearby that is (or was) owned by the film actress Julie Christy. There is always something quaint and humorous about these idiosyncratic buildings. The locals tell of how the owner built it to see his ships returning through the Bristol Channel! This folly is well named. It is also innocent. If one goes to the hideously desecrated Dover beach one will see a folly that is most certainly not innocent! This is the Channel Tunnel, or Mrs. Thatcher's Folly. Through its mouth like a satanic gargoyle spew those who are coming to take our homes, communities and destroy our environment.

When I was younger, I did an A-level in Sociology and we were trained in the Levi-Strauss folly that we are just another culture like primitive tribes somewhere up the Amazon. I suggest that sort of comparison is unscientific. For a nation that is declining from being a world empire, the realistic comparison is with previous great empires, which also collapsed. The most obvious is the fall of Rome, but there many others: the Greeks; Egyptians; Hittites; Babylonians; Sumerians. Babylon is the only one not to fall because of inner weakness or decadence. Rome also rose from a smaller core area, hit a peak then went into decline. It is idle to look for exact recurrence in history but there is a similarity of symptoms. In 345AD barbarians were pouring over the Danube and into Rome, as they are now coming out of Mrs. Thatcher's Folly. A while later St. Jerome wrote some moving lines, "I shall now say a few words of our present miseries...savage tribes in countless numbers have overrun all parts...The once noble city of Mainz has been captured and destroyed. In its Church many thousands have been massacred." (Epistle 125)

Ordinary people who live their lives through common sense often puzzle at rulers and a civil service of such folly. It is a combination of politically correct ideology and inadequacy. But people who are orientated to the world by common sense and a practical grasp of reality cannot understand why Taliban fighters who fought against our soldiers are given asylum, or why we are sued by people who were shot or hurt by our forces in the theatre of war. In a recent radio interview David Shayler, the former MI5 spy, revealed that in the 1990's MI5 allowed thousands of members of al-Qaeda into this country despite repeated warnings from the French secret services and that many of these can no longer be removed because they have been given British citizenship! There are new plans to bring in laws of

THE CHANNEL TUNNEL: Margaret Thatcher's folly

Islamophobia. At the same time we are told that terrorist attacks on us by Muslim extremists are inevitable. So now you know. Sit and wait to be blown up but if you are rude about the terrorists, the British police will arrest you! The obvious intention is to make it easier for us to have our homes and communities taken off us, but it will also facilitate racial attacks on the Jewish community.

I wish here to sound a warning. As with black racist attacks on whites which are kept secret, another hidden reality that we are not supposed to know about is racial attacks on Jewish people by Muslims, which is the second largest category of racial attack. I want to enlarge on this because of the history of Jewish people. When William Hague was leader of the Conservative party he was to attend a function with the Jewish Board of Deputies. Some refused to attend because of his outspoken attacks on asylum seekers. I assume that his words raised the awful spectre of the gas chambers, but wait! This looking back to the past for the danger is not to face the future. Did William Hague want to harm the Jewish community? By analogy, does the BNP want to harm the Jewish community? I would say straightaway that that sort of abomination degrades the perpetrators as well as the victims. Why, for example, would I want to imitate Hitler, a foreign failure? My hero was Enoch. I wonder if Blair and his cronies know they are allowing the creation of a potential holocaust against Jewish people by Muslim fanatics here on British soil - many are coming here from countries with a deep hatred for Israel and, by extension, Jews.

It is common for the forces of decadence to attribute evil intentions to us, to allege that we are actively going about the world seeking to harm those who are different from ourselves. But the multiracial totalitarianism was imposed on us, we did not ask for it, nor did we go looking for it. I am but a part of a reaction to try and save our people and communities from an unwarranted attack and if I was not morally obliged to do my duty, I would have stayed behind my plough! The whole multiracial idea was forced on us by deceitful Governments who convinced us that we were in a democracy and as our elected representatives they were acting in our interests, but all the while they were having us pushed out.

We are living through a great historical phenomenon for it falls to few to live through the destruction of their civilisation in what is one of the most evil attacks in the history of the human race on innocent, ordinary, people by their own rulers.

Europe's Parallel Society: A Ticking Demographic Bomb

Writing from Oslo, Philip Smeeton warns that the main threat to Europe from Muslims comes not just from that small minority of terrorists who murdered over 200 Spaniards in Madrid and threaten similar violence in Britain, but from the law-abiding majority who will outbreed and then out-vote us.

What has happened and is continuing to happen in Britain is also happening in Norway, Denmark, Sweden, France, Germany, Holland, Ireland and most other European countries. Well-informed yet ill-equipped to resist, Europe is allowing itself to be colonised by a culture that openly admits that its aim is to exploit the West's liberal democratic institutions, to establish theocracies and then to abolish democracy.

BRADFORD AND BIRMINGHAM

In Bradford 42.1 per cent of the population are Pakistanis, 3.2 per cent are fellow Muslims from Bangladesh, 5.2 per cent are Indians. Other ethnic groups make up 7.2 per cent. The original British population (mainly English) is 41.9 per cent.

It is the Pakistani population especially that is growing: ten years ago they were 30 per cent. In more than half of the marriages in the Pakistani community the bride or bridegroom is fetched from some village in Pakistan. There are 40 mosques in the city, two of which are former churches converted to mosques. The imams come directly from Pakistan and speak little or no English. It was in Bradford that the first public burning of Salman Rushdie's book, Satanic Verses, took place.

The immigrant population elders in many towns and cities are working for the establishment of pure Muslim areas where Sharia law can be practiced. They no longer consider themselves to be immigrants but colonists whose mission is to create new, virgin, Muslim countries. Bradford is already a Muslim city and Birmingham, Britain's second largest city, is next: the Muslims will be a majority there within the next decade. The British now pay the price for having liberal immigration laws. Ever since the 60s, when the flood of immigrants began, anyone attempting to warn about the consequences has been branded a racist or even a fascist ( I can vouch for that -Editor) and silenced. Critical mainstream politicians have been excluded from their own parties.

In Britain, the political party that can promise not only to stop immigration but also to reduce the number of immigrants resident in Britain, will become the fastest growing political party: the tendency is already clear across Europe. Allowing unlimited immigration is now obviously cultural suicide. Small numbers of immigrants could be integrated, but large populations retain their own culture. Integration projects have failed markedly across all of Europe - in Britain alone several billion pounds have been wasted to no effect. Incidentally, the Norwegian capital city, Oslo, has an immigrant population of 30 per cent.

A 'DANISH' FATWA

A reflection of Muslim attitudes throughout Europe is given in the following letter which was distributed earlier this year to all Muslim institutions in Denmark by some Turkish clerics. (But it was not supported by all of Denmark's Muslims -Editor)

"We Muslim immigrants are now many in Denmark and every year we become 15-20,000 more. It is therefore vital that we get our own area of Denmark, where Muslims can live as the holy Koran commands. It is our human right to have our own district, where we can live free from alcohol, narcotics, naked Danish girls, hotdog stands, evil pubs and every sort of Danish thing.

"We are many Muslims in Norrebro, and Norrebro is in the capital and near the airport. Because of this we must make Norrebro an Islamic part of Copenhagen only for Muslims, where our women are ours, where women can be veiled, as the holy Koran commands, where it is clean and the population is pure; we will have many Muslim schools, separate schools for boys and for girls. Gymnastic and school camps, art works that depict humans, biology and everything else bad is to be forbidden. Our boys must not swim or shower with non-Muslims because a Muslim boy is circumcised and must not show himself, because he is without a foreskin and ready to make children. The Danes are responsible for the rape of their own girls, because they don't protect them and unclean girls are not protected by the holy Koran. Islam is great and shall conquer and rule the world as the holy Koran commands. Remember that Turkey, which is now 99% Muslim, was once Christian and unclean. But the Christians have no strength, belief or faith, they are weak and we are strong.

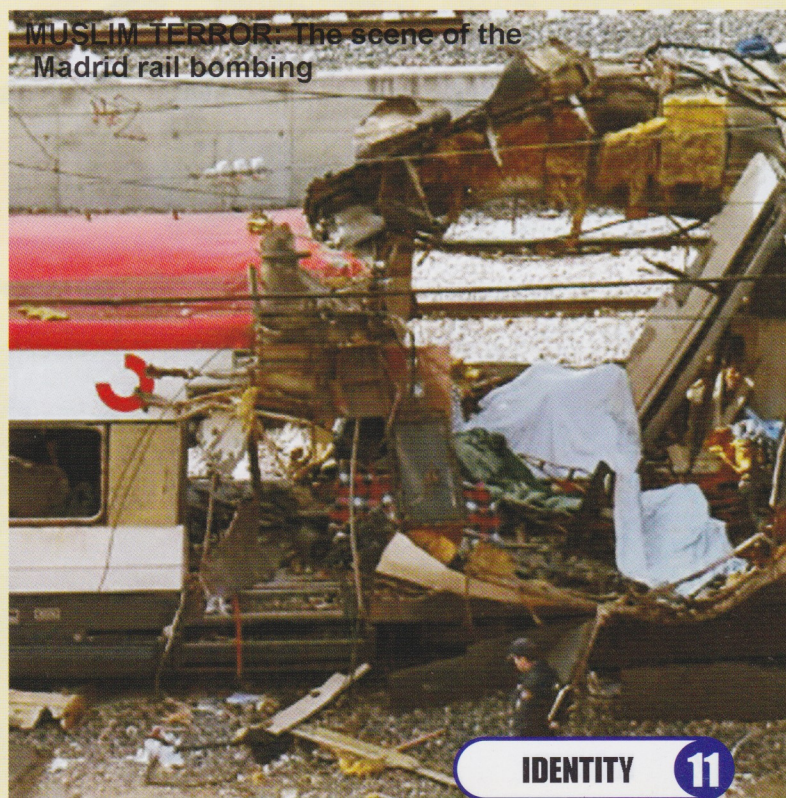

"Muhammed Gelle said a while ago in the newspapers that we Muslims would gladly return home to our own culture if we were given 100,000 Danish crowns (£9,000) each. But he is wrong: it has taken us 1400 years to get to Denmark and we can never return home because we must not betray Islam's goal, the Caliphate (-the establishment of a theocratic state, ruled by a Caliph in accordance with the Koran and the laws contained therein; the Caliph has the authority to declare holy war: Jihad). Islam is the largest and fastest growing religion. Anyone that does not work for the Caliphate is our enemy.

"Many Danish girls marry Muslim men and their children automatically become Muslims according to the Koran, even if the man takes a divorce later and brings a Muslim wife to Denmark. But a Muslim girl must never marry a Dane, because a woman is weak and can never further the Islamic faith. She receives the man's power into her when she marries, but she can never transmit power. She becomes like an animal if she receives the Danish man's power within her; she becomes unclean and disgraces Islam. When a Muslim man gets a boy with a Danish or other unclean infidel woman, the boy must be circumcised and belong to the Islamic brotherhood: Islamic law is valid everywhere in the world. We are united in faith.

"The Holy prophet has given us the Koran and our faith is stronger than all of the world's weapons. We have received our laws and regulations from Allah, while the Danish politicians are corrupt and are elected every four years and make new laws all of the time. But our laws are eternal and therefore pure. The Danes let unclean politicians rule but Allah knows best; the book of law, the holy Koran shall be our parliament.

"Let us introduce our laws in Norrebro; take over so many businesses and apartments as you can so that the Danes move out. We will make our own schools, teahouses and clubs and drive the Danes away before they ruin our children and women. Danish women are unclean, they drink and have sex with a new man every weekend, and we shall cast them out of our district. - Holy Jihad, Denmark "

The Defects of Tidal and Wind Power Systems

Ralph Ellis argues that tidal and wind electrical power systems have considerable drawbacks and that we need to look again at nuclear power, with maximum safety precautions learnt from Chernobyl. He also calls for a BNP policy on our future power systems.

One area in which the BNP lacks a clear policy is the future of energy production in this country, and yet this is an area that is vital to the future health and wealth of this nation. Indeed, it is almost as vital and as urgent as the immigration debate, which we know and love so well.

Unfortunately, while tidal power initially looks like a source of cheap, renewable energy, it suffers from a number of drawbacks. The first problem is that although the Greens demand that we use renewable energy sources, as soon as the implications of this policy become clear they then cry 'you cannot do that!' In respect of tidal power systems, these would decimate the tidal mud-flat habitats by retaining a lot more water inside the damned area for longer periods of time. In other words, the Greens are merely a protest group who exist by protesting about anything and everything, without any clear understanding of the issues or their ultimate goals. In fact, their prime policy appears to be to force this country back into the Stone Age.

The second and more practical problem with tidal power, is that it delivers its energy at set periods of the day that are in no way connected to our daily lives and therefore in no way synchronised with the electrical demand cycle. The tides are, of course, linked to the orbit and cycles of the Moon, with there being about two tides every day. This sinusoidal tidal pattern produces four slack periods during the day when the tide is turning, either at high tide or at low tide, and during these slack periods the tidal power system will not generate any electricity. If these slack periods coincide with the 7am and 7pm peak demands for electricity, as they will several times a month, then the whole generating system is next to useless.

Since the energy produced earlier in the day cannot be stored, as will be explained later, extra generating capacity will have to be brought on line to cover the deficiency. This means that for every tidal system installed, a conventional power station will have to be either built or retained to ensure continuity of energy supply. But this power station will have to be up and running all the time, as it takes up to 12 hours to bring a power station on-line from a cold start-up. Thus if we are to maintain continuity of supply, this wonderful 'free' energy tidal source actually results in twice the cost and saves very little in the way of hydrocarbon fuels. So unless we are prepared to accept rolling power cuts across the country, which would ruin our economy, it is unlikely that we could ever successfully integrate tidal power systems into the National Grid. In fact, the difficulties that are imposed by these renewable energy sources ensure that they can never power more than a small proportion of an industrialised nation's supplies.

WIND POWER

Wind power is even more problematical. But we should note first the typical technical incompetence of the Labour Party when it comes to making important policy decisions. Faced with the wrath of a few dreadlock-haired protesters, the Labour party have chosen to run down our nuclear power supplies, and back wind power as being the way forward for Britain's energy production. This is presumably because the sound of wind power is as comfortable and cuddly with the voters as a child's furry toy, and also because the Labour Party is incapable of taking tough decisions. But never in the history of government has such an impractical and dangerous policy been followed with so little in the way of discussion and debate as to its eventual implications.

The truth of the matter is that wind generation, for even 20% of our energy supplies would require some 60,000 wind-turbines - which represents a vast financial expense and an ecological nightmare. But, in addition, recent experience has demonstrated that when taking into account maintenance downtime and periods when the wind is either too strong or too slack, wind generators will only supply the grid for 40% of the time. Indeed, it has even been questioned if these wind generators will ever return the energy that was used to create them in the first place. Thus, as in the tidal situation, this massive and hugely expensive programme of wind-generator construction will not in any way reduce the number of power stations required, as standby power will be required for calm days - producing yet more unnecessary duplication of power stations and their associated expense. Remember that the wind can be slack for days or weeks on end, and there is no storage system in the world that can cover for these kind of outages.

Undaunted by this axiom, it has been seriously argued by some influential Greens in academia, that this variability in wind-generation supply could be overcome by the use of pumped water storage systems to store the electrical energy. However, for the following reasons this is utter nonsense:

1. Pumped storage systems are already fully utilized in overcoming variability in electricity DEMAND, and so they have absolutely no extra capacity for overcoming variability in SUPPLY due to the unreliable wind and tidal generation systems.

2. Pumped storage systems currently only supply a very small percentage of the grid (about 5%) for just a few hours, while wind generation can go off-line for days or weeks. If we had 20% of our generating capacity from wind-generators, as the Labour government wishes, the lights would be going out and the computers going down all over the country.

3. Pumped storage systems are not only very expensive to construct; the topography of Britain ensures that very few sites are available, and so we will never be able to store significant amounts of our energy requirements. These storage systems also tend to be situated in areas of outstanding natural beauty, and so - you have guessed it - the Greens oppose the very storage system they are promoting.

These and other delusions that are still being peddled by the Greens are downright dangerous, as they give the uninformed and ignorant ministers in government the impression that we can maintain this nation on renewable energy supplies. But nothing could be further from the truth, and if anyone wants a demonstration of what rolling power cuts due to renewable energy outages will deliver, we need look no further than the recent power cuts across America and Europe. Aside from the economic losses, had these power cuts taken place in the winter and the offices of New York been evacuated for fire-safety reasons (as they were), there would have been hundreds or thousands of deaths from hypothermia.

WHEN OIL COMES TO AN END

But if the large-scale use of renewable energy systems is utterly impractical, there has to be a solution to our energy supply problems; because even in the short term our dependence on foreign oil and gas places us at the mercy of oil owning despots, who will seek to gain every leverage possible over us. Look at the current situation in the Middle East and multiply that by ten, and you have some idea of our future political situation if we become solely dependent on foreign energy supplies.

In addition to this, for every year we delay in getting reliable and internally sourced energy supplies, millions of tonnes of a valuable mineral resource are literally going up in smoke. Nearly everything we need in our modern world needs oil as a raw material to make it - no oil supplies not only means no energy, but also no raw materials too.

When the last barrel of oil comes out of the ground - and if alternative energy provisions are not already in place - human civilization as we know it will cease to exist. That is neither an exaggeration nor a joke, for absolutely nothing in our modern world will work without adequate energy supplies and petrochemical raw materials to make the things we so often take for granted. Needless to say, with all of human civilisation being so utterly dependent on oil in one way or another, the desperate scramble for the last remaining oil supplies will probably trigger a world war and a nuclear exchange anyway, so the presence of a few wind-turbines around the country will be utterly meaningless in the wider perspective.

NUCLEAR POWER

What ever you may think about the technology, the ONLY reliable answer to our energy supply and global warming problems is going to be nuclear power (either fission or fusion). Ok, so nuclear power has got a bad name through Chernobyl and a few other incidents, but the Chernobyl plant in particular should never have been allowed in the first place.

The RBMK design was (and still is) a rudimentary graphite moderated steam cooled plant with no containment vessel - indeed, it was no better than the original 'graphite pile' in the Manhattan Project (circa 1943). Remember that graphite and steam are an explosive combination if they get hot enough, and that's exactly what happened at Chernobyl. This should never have been allowed at the design stage, which is why the British AGRs (Advanced Gas Reactors) used an inert gas coolant. In addition, both the AGR and the USA's PWRs (Pressurized Water Reactors) are naturally stable and their very nature will resist and counter a runaway thermic event like that which occurred at Chernobyl.

While the early designs of nuclear power stations have highlighted the problems that poor design or construction can pose, our design and technology capability has moved on in great strides. The Russian RBMKs are the equivalent of a model T Ford, the British AGRs represent Morris Minor technology from the '60s, but we are now capable of producing McLaren F1s - which provide a quantum leap in terms of safety and efficiency. The point is that there are methods of reducing nuclear risks if we put our minds to it, and the latest design from Westinghouse - the AP1000 - will be able to deliver ten times the efficiency of the reactors in current use. Therefore, we could supply Britain's entire current and future energy requirements with nuclear power, while only using the same amount of nuclear material that is in circulation today (and which produces just 20% of our needs). Remember also that nuclear power is non-polluting in terms of greenhouse gasses, acid rain and other noxious emissions, and thus all of the reductions that we aspire to make in these pollutants could be achieved in a stroke if we turned to nuclear power.

And when it comes to nuclear safety issues, let us not forget that thousands of people in ships and submarines live in close proximity to nuclear plants with no ill-effects. Also remember that while nuclear power has a bad name (courtesy of the Greens, who want us to return to the Stone age), far more ecological damage has been done and many more people have died though oil and coal extraction over the past decades, than in nuclear power incidents. Remember Piper Alpha, Aberfan, Torrey Canyon, Exxon Valdez, etc: etc: The list is almost endless, especially if one includes all the coal-pit disasters in Russia and the Eastern European countries, from which much of our energy is now sourced. If a nuclear power station had killed a whole school full of children the Greens would never let us forget it, but because it was the result of the coal industry they let the memory fade. Why, I ask you, do the Greens exhibit these double standards? What is it about technical progress that they so despise? In some respects, they appear to be portraying themselves as the UK's very own Taliban, and in this guise they must be vigorously opposed.

NUCLEAR FUSION

It should also be mentioned that the proponents of 'renewable energy' are relying on nuclear power anyway, as the source of their 'renewable' wind, wave and solar energy is the Sun (excepting tidal). If the Green pressure groups like this form of nuclear power so much, then all we need to do is imitate nature and create our own Sun. Although fusion power still has a way to go before it becomes a commercial reality, it should be borne in mind that fission power is only a temporary stop-gap that will maintain our economy and civilisation over the next few centuries until something better comes along. Nuclear fusion may well be that brighter future, but for all the reasons already given we need a solution now, not in 50 year's time.

We have about 50 or so years before the shortage of oil becomes acute and our economies begin to falter, and that is not very much time to alter our entire energy production industry. It is like relying on the Victorians to plan ahead and ensure that we still had a viable civilisation in the '50s. While the Victorians were both successful and resourceful, history demonstrates that new sources of raw materials were never actively planned until the old sources were in desperately short supply or worked-out completely. However, the introduction of a new, nationwide power generating system is an extremely long-term investment, and if we are to make this change without a dramatic interruption to our energy supplies (and our society) we need foresight, vision and a quick decision.

What we need is a tough, dynamic rational leader to take a difficult but responsible decision to dramatically increase our nuclear energy production capability. This government is incapable of making such decisions, as it has neither the political will, the common sense, nor the technical knowledge to implement such a strategy. This means a delay of at least two years or more before anything can be done. But then I also despair that any of the other potential candidates in the various parties are any better equipped. France has already had the necessary foresight and swapped over to 80% nuclear power generation; the question is, however, has the BNP also got the courage to think the unthinkable and say the unsayable?

CHERNOBYL: A disaster waiting to happen

Tackling the Bushmeat Trade

We need restrictions on the import of this bushmeat

In a recent item on Radio 4, the BBC appeared to say that DEFRA (the Department for Environment Food and Rural Affairs) is spending £25 Million in combating the illegal import of Bushmeat. Whilst the importation of exotic species of animal for eating (hence the term bushmeat) poses a danger to public health and contributes to the impending extinction of endangered species, one might wonder if £25 millions were an excessive amount to spend, and whether such a sum of money might not be better spent on getting at the root of the problem.

However, according to DEFRA's own website, £15 million will go to boost veterinary training and research in universities over the next three years. Additionally, as part of a new alliance with the Wellcome Trust aimed at underpinning research and development in veterinary science, the Trust "will also invest an associated £25 million over five years towards a strategic initiative aimed at researching exotic animal diseases in the UK and developing countries".

GOVERNMENT FAILURES

Considering Government incompetence in dealing with the Foot and Mouth epidemic and Mad Cow disease; the continuing threat of Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease to human health following the apparent movement of the latter into humans; the international threat to poultry presented by Bird Flu; and the SARS outbreaks apparently caused by people in China eating Civet Cats; investment - and especially some common-sense planning - is sorely needed. Certainly our country needs more veterinary surgeons, and initiatives aimed at researching exotic animal diseases with the purpose of combating them efficiently, are essential. Scrutiny of the facts appears to indicate that the total spend will be £50 million over the next five years, with other government agencies contributing to the total £25 million, matching the contribution from the Wellcome Trust.

Nevertheless this is still a rearguard action from a government that cannot cope in a crisis. A future British National Party government will not only protect British citizens from disease and interruption of the food supply, but significantly contribute to the protection of the international community by ensuring enough vets and scientists (along with policemen, nurses, etc) are trained and that sufficient research is conducted to prevent such disasters happening whenever humanly possible.

SIMPLE SOLUTIONS

Simple measures such as restrictions on imported foodstuffs generally, and special attention to the illegal importation of plants and foodstuffs, in conjunction with a humane repatriation programme of the illegal immigrants who are doubtless the main consumers of rats, mice, snakes and monkeys - along with certain 'cuddlier' endangered species - will go a long way to eradicating not only the evils cited here, but many other problems currently besetting our society, as well.

Orderly arrangements for the movement of livestock within the UK and the selling of traditional farm produce - including meat, poultry, dairy, and vegetables, through local markets will not only help to contain the spread of disease, but will take the profit from farming out of the pockets of the supermarket shareholders and restore it to the farmers, to whom it rightfully belongs.

Fewer Universities More Technical Colleges

We have just been through that time of year when the A-level and GCSE results have been announced and, surprise, surprise, our young people continue to become ever more intelligent - at least that is what the Labour and Lib-Dem egalitarians tell us.

We do not decry the hard work that most of our youth have put in to obtain their grades, but the truth is that the standards have declined year on year and most A 'graders' would be hard pressed to pass if they had to take the same exam papers of twenty years ago, let alone thirty or forty.

This is not the whinging of an old Grammar School scholarship boy who knows that a Matriculation in those old days would now get you into a good university, but is based on what the universities and employers themselves are saying. The Government's policy of trying to get half of all school leavers into university by 2010 is forcing universities to recruit students who do not possess the academic acumen to undertake degree-level work. This should be no reflection on them. Rather they should be encouraged to enter technical colleges (not universities) to train as electricians, plumbers, carpenters, skilled IT operatives, and many other vocations which Labour will eagerly fill with immigrant workers so it can justify its open door immigration policy. Apprenticeships in industry subsidised to a competitive wage should also be fully encouraged.

As it is nearly half of all universities are having to put on "remedial classes" in English and maths because of the deteriorating quality of undergraduates. Julie Henry writing in the Sunday Telegraph, July 18th, said that a survey of vice-chancellors shows that 48 per cent have been forced to provide special lessons in literacy and numeracy for first-year students. Two thirds stated that extra numeracy classes were now the norm. Poor mathematical skills were the biggest problem facing the universities, but the vice-chancellors also complained about declining writing skills, their students struggling with basic grammar and unable to write essays.

Importantly for our nation's future, science in Britain faces a crisis unless more pupils are encouraged to study A-level physics, chemistry and mathematics, according to the Royal Society.

"There's a very serious long-term decline in the number of students taking physics, chemistry and maths at A-level," said Bob Ward, the head of policy and communications.

Although many school teachers are dedicated, there are a large number of leftists, even Marxists, who are more interested in brainwashing our young people with multi-culturalism and multi-racialism. These are the ones who are encouraging our older youths to ignore the more worthwhile studies and direct them to politics (establishment variety), psychology, media studies, black women's rights, or even the life of Che Guevara.

Kerry's Wife Funds Far-Left Groups

If we had a vote in the forthcoming American Presidential Elections there is little to choose between Bush and Kerry. With no BNP equivalent candidate standing as we write we could possibly be tempted to vote for the arch anti-global capitalist Ralph Nader, even if on many issues he is rather left wing. However, such is the power of 'democracy' (just as in Britain) that the so-called Democrats have got their lawyers working overtime to have his name removed from the ballot papers in many states in case he steals too many of their votes!

With the carnage in Iraq continuing to rise, how could one vote for Bush (or his side-kick Blair)? The American and British people were led into supporting this attack upon a sovereign nation by deceit. The Iraqis must wonder which is worse: to have been 'rescued' by the Bush-led Coalition or to remain oppressed by Saddam. And they must know that the war, with its needless waste of Iraqi, American and British lives, was for American oil interests and the interests of Israel.

As for voting for John Kerry, if you thought he was 'scary', as the Americans say, he doesn't hold a candle to his influential wife! On the death of her first husband, H. John Heinz III of the Heinz food giant, she inherited his $500 million fortune. Much of this, of course, is now at the disposal of her second husband, John Kerry. But how does she spend much of the rest?

According to the G2 Bulletin, an online intelligence newsletter of WorldNetDaily, in the years between 1995-2001 she gave more than $4million to an organisation called the Tides Foundation.

It supports the Democratic Justice Fund, a joint venture with international financier George Soros, which seeks to ease restrictions on Muslim immigration from 'terrorist' states. It also supports the Council for American-Islamic Relations, whose leaders are known to have close ties to the terrorist group, Hamas.

The Tides Foundation supports the National Lawyers Guild, organised as a communist front during the Cold War era. One of their attorneys, Lynne Stewart, has been arrested for helping a client, Sheikh Omar Abdel Rahman, communicate with terror cells in Egypt. He is the convicted mastermind of the 1993 World Trade Centre bombing. It also supports the "Barrio Warriors", a radical Hispanic group whose primary goal is to return Arizona, California, New Mexico and Texas to Mexico.

Victimisation of BNP Artist and Environmentalist

I am indebted to Voice of Freedom, the BNP's monthly newspaper, for the following information on the media's persecution of the BNP's hard working London Regional Organiser, Richard Barnbrook. See Freedom's August issue for the full story.

Richard is an environmentalist, artist and sculptor of considerable note as well as being a teacher and lecturer. He had the idea of celebrating Britain's heritage by designing and planting a series of hillside woodlands in the shape of traditional heraldic beasts representing the various parts of the country.

The Jubilee Woods Trust was set up, with a main project started at Sefton Meadows, Liverpool, to create a community woodland, including 18 schools. Not only was Richard actively engaged in the work, including sculpting a giant barn owl from local stone, but he was instrumental in raising a considerable part of the funds and obtaining the support of the Royal Family. Further help came from a £20,000 donation from the musician Sting.

Then the gutter press found that he was an active worker for the BNP. They completely ignored all his community and environmental work. Instead, their readers were told that Richard Barnbrook had 'conned' Sting and even in one newspaper - now being sued - that the money had been used to fund the BNP's London mayoral election campaign. The outcome was that the press lies and persecution led the trustees to buckle under and close down the Sefton project.

This is yet another example of the mockery that the liberal-left, who dominate our media, have made of our democracy.

Selective Support For Past Tyrannies

An interesting article by John Michell in a recent issue of

The Oldie magazine raised some interesting points on the liberal intelligentsia's attitudes to tyrannical political systems of the recent past. He reported that members of the Reform Club wanted to kick out one of their number, Lady Renouf. She had apparently annoyed them by inviting David Irving to lunch. As a rather controversial historian on Nazi Germany it was felt that he was not the sort of person you should hobnob with. John Michell then wrote:

"Why is it that Irving is so specially objectionable, while apologists for Stalinism and active supporters of Red tyrannies feast with the high and mighty and receive honours from the Queen? ... it leads to a further, deeper question about the established way of thinking that shapes our conventions and institutions." Michell goes on to define what that way of thinking is and suggests that it could be called Marxist materialism, or liberal fundamentalism. He supports the latter as a title and suggests that it has overtaken the traditional liberal mindedness. He goes on to say:

"Now we are trapped, caught up in a godless crusade, bullying our neighbours and forcing upon them our latest fads - not Jesus and cricket this time, but the sex and porn level of culture that we call freedom but can just as well be seen as the prelude to a universal tyranny."

Well said, John Michell, for traditional liberalism meant the freedom to think as you like; the fundamentalists' version is freedom to think only as they do.

LETTER OF THE MONTH

>> Well Done Nick Griffin

I watched the BBC hatchet job (July) and was appalled at the way the programme manipulated and selectively edited this 'Punch and Judy' show to depict the party as a bunch of mindless morons and fascists. I am glad that the people involved have been dealt with, but having said that, we have all said things that we later regret, do we not? Why shouldn't one of them feel like sitting in the back of a van with a machine gun: the muslims can say that and get away with it?

As far as Nick Griffin's interview on Newsnight afterwards is concerned, well what can I say? Daniel into the lions' den or what? His dominance of the situation, his stubborn way of staying in view of the line of questioning, was superb. He was a master at controlling the bull baiting BBC interviewer and came through by turning everything back on to the presenter in its true light. I certainly liked the masterful stroke of actually having a copy of the Koran with him: perfect. Well done to Nick Griffin! You were superb and a credit to all free thinking British.

He undid all the damage and more that that vile pack of liars had spouted through its rear end in what it tried to call 'investigative journalism'. I am glad you are so good at this and now at the helm of the party. Brilliant defence and attack. I would love to see you in a full blown head to head debate with the other party leaders. Beware Blair, Howard and Kennedy, you are about to meet your political master, at last!

>> Nationalists Of The World 'Stand Together'

I am a Federal Senator Candidate for the ONE Nation Party in Australia. I was amused to read that the BNP have some similar problems with media bias as we do, although I was delighted to see the similarity in our respective policies. After speaking with some Nationalists from Europe, there is a global feeling of resentment towards this idea of multiculturalism that is being forced down our throats here in OZ and obviously in other nations as well. What we feel as either British Nationalists or Australian Nationalists is not just a unique experience. Across the globe the cultural heritage of all nations is being challenged and is under threat by intended extermination. Why, I can only guess as being because we are easier to enslave without a heart driven passion. Sedated, if you like.

Europe itself is swinging right. Why? This is our chance now, for if we leave it any later the old parties might get the upper hand as they import more multiculturalists to swing the vote their way. We must endeavour to stand united on a global front. We have to be able to appreciate from a grass roots level that we are all on the same side fighting for the same things for our respective nations.

Nationalism isn't racism, it is the defence of the national cultural heritage and sovereignty of any particular nation. In saying that I want England to remain sovereign to English people is also saying I wish the same thing for Australians, Germans, Poles, Hungarians, Dutch, French, etc and vice versa. This is true Nationalism.

>> A BBC Mole Writes...

After spending six months working with the help of a mole who had been in place for nearly three years, 'The Secret Agent' was expecting to uncover much more damning evidence on the British National Party. The programme even employed a former spymaster to tutor Gwynne how to discover the party's best kept secrets.

The 100 hours of tapes were regarded by the producers as 'bitterly disappointing', but thanks to diligent work from the Corporation's publicity department the programme was still able to create its desired effect.

>> Who Will Sing The Hymns?

The Bishop of Hulme, in line with the current liberal, multicultural and politically correct stance of the Anglican Church, has demanded the banning of the hymn I Vow To Thee My Country. He stated that: "the hymn's popularity was a symptom of a 'dangerous' increase in English nationalism". The Bishop also voiced the opinion that the hymn's associations with British empire were questionable in a multicultural society.

If the Bishop is so concerned that Christian hymns can be offensive to members of other faiths, should he not also demand the banning of several of our most popular hymns? For instance, Onwards Christian Soldiers marching as to war with the cross of Jesus going on before. To Muslims it may have connotations of the Crusaders! I am sure Canon Morris would agree. Then there is Jerusalem. The suggestion that we move Israel's holy city to England's green and pleasant land surely cannot go down well with people of the Jewish faith.

However, the Bishop should not be too concerned. Anglican churches are closing down at such a rate that within a decade there will not be any Christian congregations left to sing any of these hymns.

>> Bye Bye Barclays

I am disgusted to hear of Barclays' action in closing the BNP account. I have written to their head office to inform them I shall close my account with them.

This used to be a country of free speech. It is good to find a party supporting British Pride and I will do what I can to help by spreading the word.

>> BBC's Agent Provocateur

I am sure you will appreciate that since the BBC's hatchet job I have been giving thought to my membership of the Party. As a result, I enclose my cheque for £100.

As an indication of what one is up against with the BBC, I will repeat a story that was told me by a group of Essex policemen shortly after the Students' strike at Essex University in the 70s. It seems that they were sent with other police to keep order during the strike at the picket lines. Also present was a group of BBC cameramen and reporters.

A vehicle laden with fruit and vegetables for the College arrived at the lines and was stopped by the pickets. A BBC person approached the driver and offered him £100 to drive through the picket line so that they could film the trouble that would ensue. The driver sensibly turned and drove away, much to the annoyance of the BBC!

We certainly have enemies in our own country, especially those who would incite others to violence, apparently in our name. I beg you to be cautious in those you might trust.

>> Graham John

It is with great sadness that I read your obituary to Graham John in July's Identity. I only knew Graham for a short time, 6-7 years, but I always found him with a smile on his face and found it a great pleasure to sit and talk with him, sharing great historical matters of which Graham had great knowledge. He inspired me with his tales of battles against the left wing aggressors throughout the 60s-90s and his die hard spirit. Many times his own freedom was at risk for his patriotic determination, but he never waned.

Thank you Graham, it was a pleasure to have known you and to call you friend. Britain now has one true son less. Sleep well.

I am using one of the computers in Stockton Library to transmit this to you. As I logged on I noticed that the previous user (or last Hotmail subscriber to use it) had this address:

>> Why I Joined the BNP

Two events last March finally persuaded me to join the BNP. The first was, ironically, broadcast by the politically correct BBC. It was a report at the end of Newsnight on March 3rd which revealed that the ultimate aim of British Muslims is to re-name Britain as a brand new Islamic country called "Haffala".

The second was a week later, following the Madrid train bombing. It was not so much the bombing itself: it was the reaction of some mainstream Muslim clerics. They indicated that we need not be too concerned about the 190 dead passengers because they were just non-believers, just infidels, and their lives were worthless.

>> Sold Down The River Again

The traitors have been laying into us yet again it would seem, but this time it is directed at our brave men and women serving in Iraq. They removed Saddam Hussein for Blair and his cronies and how do they repay them? By sacking many of them in the RAF, the Navy and Army (partly to save paying them service pensions) and reducing our armed forces to a mere 102,000. This means that regiments that served this nation are being scrapped, and we now rely on the US and EU for defence.

Our forces are already overstretched because Blair wants to play a world policeman but yet his Government cuts them down yet again. The armed forces are our only true security against enemies and terrorists. By reducing them we cut our security. I hope that if the BNP gain power that the armed forces are again increased in numbers to ensure our security. Mind you, Blair would never completely destroy them, not if he wants yet another adventure that Bush has already planned in Iran.

Photographic Notes

Tony Lecomber, Group Development Officer, stresses the need for BNP activities photos and how to get the best quality

A picture tells a thousand words. It's an old cliché, but as true now as ever - particularly in the modern age of print and instant media. For the British National Party which relies upon selling itself, its ideas and conveying a message, it ought to be very obvious that photographs and good quality photographs at that, are important.

All too often, however, important BNP events, typically elections and election counts, have no BNP camera present to record famous BNP victories. That this is so is a shocking indictment of our attitude towards photographs. At our winning Halifax by-election count last year, there were 100 BNP people present and only one camera which wasn't up to the job in poor lighting of getting a decent picture. After the famous BNP victories in Burnley last year we were forced to borrow pictures of our own winning candidates from local and national newspapers!

Quite simply, if we wish to have publications and a web site which show the best face of the BNP, then we need to have the photos to select from in the first place. All Organisers and all activists should buy a quality camera. Practically all 'old fashioned' film cameras produce excellent results in daylight with attention to lighting and flash needed only in poor light conditions. The only disadvantage of a film camera is a small time delay in getting pictures developed and another to post them off to The Voice of Freedom or Identity where they can be scanned into a computer where publication layout takes place.

Digital cameras appear to be superseding film cameras, the main reason for which is price. There are no developing or film costs and for those with computers the pictures can be fed directly into a PC. The important thing to realise about digital cameras is that they are rated in megapixels. Very cheap digital cameras can be had rated at 1 or 2 megapixels. These are little better than useless, although for photos going on to a PC screen or onto the Internet, they are sufficient. However, the BNP not only uses the web but the medium of print as well.

Typically photos are sent to Identity and Freedom at very low resolutions, sometimes at 72 dpi (dots per inch) which is the standard resolution used on the Internet. Low resolutions such as these may be acceptable just for the Internet, but they are hopelessly inadequate for print. There are technical reasons for this related to a PC screen needing three dots to make a colour (red, green, blue) and four dots to do the same in print.

As a result, digital cameras ideally need to be 5 megapixels. You can be fairly safe with 4 megapixels and if - and only if - the picture is to be kept small or shown in black and white only, you can get away with a 3 megapixel camera. 3 megapixel cameras can be had from around £150 or so, but 5 megapixel cameras can be had from £240, although they can go up to £450.

This picture of a jolly RWB goer at last year's RWB has been chosen because the object is clear, there is no confusing clutter and there is good colour and contrast.

Pic 1 is a 300 dpi pic measuring 4cm x 5.24cm. In print ready CMYK format (to achieve full colour), this pic weighs in at 1.1Mb

300 dpi, but the smaller size means that the pic only weighs in at 171Kb. The real comparison should be made between this pic and Pic 3

Pic 3 is still 1.5cm x 1.96, but it has been lowered in resolution to 72 dpi as typically used on the web. It looks fine on screen, but is hopeless for print as you can see.

Extra and bigger memory cards can also be had and the rule is, buy the best camera you can initially, even if memory is low, and then buy a decent memory card or two a couple of months down the line if money is tight, so spreading the cost.

What is not acceptable in any way are the 72 dpi pics beloved of the Internet. 300 dpi is the standard to be used. It gives a higher resolution allowing sharp pictures in colour and also allowing enlargement which is nearly always needed at some point - but without losing definition or becoming 'jaggy'. Voice of Freedom often uses low resolution pics and they can be seen as less sharp than pics used in ID. What you may not know is that because these pics are in black and white, they only need one dot to represent a point of information whereas a colour pic needs four. Therefore, all things being equal, colour pics need to be four times the resolution to give the same sharpness of picture at the same size.

Consider also this: the difference between 72 dpi and 300 dpi. You might think that this is a qualitative difference of just over four, but this would be wrong. For while  $72 \times 4.167 = 300$ , the real difference is larger. 72 dpi means  $72 \times 72$  for 5,184 dots in a square inch. Likewise, 300 dpi means  $300 \times 300$  for 90,000 dots in a square inch. As you can now clearly see (and this is a resolution and qualitative difference) the difference is not 4, but 17!

The Road To Ruin

by Ian Dawson, York Organiser

Despite the non-stop liberal propaganda which emanates from such organisations as the BBC and the treacherous and profit-seeking mass media, the British public is now starting to see the harsh realities of uncontrolled immigration. Whether it be riots in Oldham or Bradford, pitting immigrants against natives, or riots in Peterborough seeing one foreign ethnic group attacking another, the consequences of ethnic and cultural diversity are becoming ever more apparent. Not that any member of the BNP needs reminding, for it seems like routine common sense to suggest that forcing a country to go from 99.9 per cent white to around 88 per cent white (though probably lower if anybody knew the real figures) in a few decades, will cause turmoil, upset and in some cases rioting.

The liberal stance is that it is 'wicked racist white people' who are to blame for the troubles which now confront us. The truth, however, lies in the fact that any ethnic or cultural group will put the interests of people like themselves before the interests of those who are unlike themselves. It is not a question of who is better or worse, yet a question of identity and belonging. It is liberals themselves, through not being able to see the world as it really is, that are to blame, mainly, though not exclusively, in the form of the white, gutless, greedy politician.

HOMOGENOUS NATIONS MOST PEACEFUL

Once rival ethnic and cultural groups attain a significant presence within a nation, rent-seeking, back-scratching, and discrimination will always be apparent, and white people are no more to blame than anyone else. It is not a question of an individual's skin colour making them a good or a bad person. Yet the fact is that within a world of nation states, those with ethnic homogeneity are most often the ones found to be peaceful (internally and in their external relations) and prosperous. Anybody who points out these seemingly obvious facts usually has to face being called a racist, merely for looking at the world and noting one or two blatant facts. (Even in those countries that are an exception to the above, such as the USA, the naked eye can see the ghettos that spring up in every major city as wave after wave of immigrants and their children turn once proud and peaceful communities into no-go areas for various ethnic groups.)

However, there are many pieces of evidence which can be used to back up these claims, many of which can be found in mainstream literature. For example, an article by Clive Archer, titled The Nordic Area as a Zone of Peace, printed in the Journal of Peace Research, can be used to give credence to the previous points. In noting the factors that have contributed to the relative peacefulness of the Nordic area, Archer states "The relative Nordic peacefulness can also be explained in terms of the internal cohesion of the region proving fewer opportunities for conflict than other parts of Europe. The lack of ethnic and cultural divisions within the Nordic area that have the potential for militarization is seen as a major contributor to Nordic peace."

"Compared with most other regions of Europe, the Nordic area is ethnically, culturally, religiously and linguistically homogeneous. There is a certain common history, and the elite can understand each other's language (with the exception of Finnish) fairly easily". Why then, Mr. Blair, does Britain continue to allow in hundreds of thousands, of non-White, non-Christian, non-English speaking, anti-Western economic migrants often dressed up as asylum seekers? Can you not foresee the devastation that will be wrecked upon this once green, pleasant and peaceful land?

Thankfully, there is now a political party that has transformed itself from reclusive outsider to a professional and electable party, which stands up for common sense, the hard worker, the native resident. This party must continue along its steady path and to continue maintaining that creating a multiracial, multicultural society will lead to disaster in the long term. If anybody is preoccupied with race hate, there are numerous far-right groups where they would be welcome - the BNP is not one of them.

It is human nature that will determine the fate of multiculturalism, not the BNP supposedly stirring up trouble, or 'racist white man'. Nationalism is the only way forward, the only political ideology that can both give nations a sense of pride, purpose and identity, and simultaneously stop the impersonal, life-wrecking consequences of modern day business. A world of coffee coloured, materialistic, selfish, ignorant, greedy people will be the order of the day if the liberal minority continue to rule over the oppressed majority. It is time that silent majority found full voice.
